OLD EAST LIBERTY

The rise and fall of East Liberty is a familiar story in Pittsburgh. In its “golden era” in the 1940s and 1950s, East Liberty exemplified a vibrant commercial center and a tight-knit residential community. Pittsburgh’s “second downtown” declined rapidly in the 1960s after an ambitious urban renewal program designed to remake East Liberty so that it could compete with the new suburban markets and shopping malls.

In 1999 a community plan was developed and called A Vision for East Liberty. This set the stage for the next generation of revitalization. The plan highlighted community initiatives that represented the beginning of local investment and success, which became the building blocks for change. East Liberty was determined to reposition itself as a successful, self-sustaining community once again.

NEW EAST LIBERTY

Today, East Liberty is a major destination for the city of Pittsburgh. Every day, families and young professionals move into newly-built upscale apartments and luxury townhouses, making their home in an area bursting with trendy shops and eclectic dining. It has become a hub of cutting-edge technology, providing office space for Google and UPMC Technology Development Center. Businesses and start-ups add immense value to the area, creating new jobs and exciting opportunities. Over the course of nearly two decades, East Liberty has set a new standard for revitalization and growth, for business and entertainment, and for culture and community.

In 1999, there was A Vision for East Liberty. Today, we invite you to Explore East Liberty.
